A group of individuals from Lockheed Martin's Leadership Development Program volunteered to help clean up Pleasant Valley Park on October 31, 2008. During their day-long visit, ten participants helped to dig up old, unused piping and collected garbage that littered the former nursery to help prepare it for its transformation into a park.

The Leadership Development Program focuses on providing high-potential employees with additional training and opportunities to help prepare them for leadership roles within the corporation. As future leaders, participants support programs that serve our community. Lockheed Martin is dedicated to implementing practices and pursuing projects that protect natural resources, conserve energy and reduce emissions. By participating in this project, the volunteers had a direct impact on preserving a piece of nature in their own backyard. The Pleasant Valley Park clean-up effort was a great opportunity to fully implement Lockheed Martin's corporate initiative to "Go Green."

“ It was a very fun service activity! We hope to stop by sometime this year and see how things are progressing. ”

“ Park clean-up projects with volunteer groups foster a sense of community and offer personal and professional growth for all involved through sharing of knowledge and abilities. ”
